

Mnason Tweheyo

He is currently a Professor and Dean School of Forestry, Environmental and Geographical Sciences in the College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences, Makerere University. He holds a BSc. Forestry and MSc. Forestry from Makerere University and PhD in Applied Ecology from the Norwegian University of Life Sciences (NLH) in Norway. He teaches, supervises students, and does research in applied ecology and natural resources. He has published more than 34 papers in international peer reviewed journals and three book chapters. He has presented more than 15 papers in international conferences, and won more than 20 grants including an international award in conservation. Prof. Tweheyo has supervised 24 masters, three PhDs, chaired more than 40 PhD panels and 300 masters viva voce. He has vast experience in leadership, policy, land use, watershed and water catchment management, food security, ecology and resource assessment, and administration. He has been an external examiner and vetter of more than six Universities and has led collaborative research in more than 10 Universities. Mnason has profound interest in outreach and community development. He has practical interest in commercial forestry and production of high quality tree planting materials in Uganda.