

David M. Tumusiime

Associate Professor of Environment and Natural Resources. He holds BSc Forestry (Hons) and MSc and PhD from University of Life Sciences in Norway. He is the current Director of Makerere University Biological Field Station in Kibale National Park, western Uganda. He has extensive experience and research interest in human dimensions of natural resource management drawing on perspectives from a variety of fields including sociology, economics, and political ecology. He has conducted research and provided graduate training in these areas for over 10 years. He is a member of several academic, conservation, and community service boards in Uganda and the region. He has published over 20 papers and won 3 research grants.